

American Art Deco Screen Door Stretcher with Tall Flamingo

Reference:

MPD-000465

Description

This American art deco screen door stretcher once graced the front door of a fine South Florida home! It was a tradition in Miami from the 1920's thru the 1950's to have decorative screen door stretchers on their front doors. Most homes did not have air conditioning and screen doors were a must to let the breeze flow in. The results became a form of folk art. Constructed of hand wrought iron by local artisans, this screen stretcher has a flamingo standing in water in a leafy grove. It is 64" high x 28" wide.
